I fell for Jerome in front of a breakfast plate, the morning after New Year's Day. I admired how easy it was for him to reveal himself while eating a mountain of potatoes. I cherished that he knew how to gain my trust so quickly. It felt like I had been eating toasts with him my whole life.

For half a year, Jerome was my boyfriend, even if I never dared calling him that. He and I had very different visions of romantic relationships. After six months, I had enough. I gave Jerome an ultimatum: the other girls or me. He chose the others.

The bittersweet tale of a heartbreak with comical overtones.

VINCENT AND CASSANDRA

Roland Lapointe

You could already hear the sirens in the distance. When you are used to it, you can tell the difference between the siren of an ambulance and that of a police patroller. Damn, there was no place for a girl in my story! I should have left her standing there. I should have left in on Warrior and never looked back.

The day Vincent meets Cassandra at the corner store, he feels like he has known her forever. Except she should never have crossed his path. When Vincent decides to let her tag along for the ride, he sets off a series of events that cannot be stopped. And now that Cassandra's fate is tied to his, he can't go back.
